Another successful presentation of certificates took place at the Muntons Head office in Stowmarket, Suffolk on the 9th November 2007 where Dr Rosemarie Pearson a representative from the West Suffolk College presented the COSHH (control of substances hazardous to health) certificates to the employees of Muntons.

Muntons takes great pride in training – investing in the development of its employees, benefiting those who want to better themselves and contributing to the professionalism of the Company. This has been reinforced by the relationship established between Muntons and The West Suffolk College. Programmes like the COSHH training allows Muntons to establish its own in-house courses ultimately resulting in improvements in practice within the company.

Alastair Wesson, Lean Manufacturing Manager, collected his level 2 award in principles of COSHH certificate and Training skills for hands on COSHH certificate (which allows him to now train others) said “ The real difficulty is finding the information about substances and how to correctly use them within the work place, the course helps in understanding where to look for this information.”

Kay Moss, Muntons Group Health and Safety Advisor, highlighted the importance of this type of training – “COSHH training within the work place ensures that we have a workforce who recognise the importance of the use and correct application of all substances.”
