

Muntons PRESS RELEASE

Chloe Richardson New appointment

I am sure that some of our agents and distributors will be wondering what has happened to Chloe Richardson, previously a senior member of our sales administration team. You will probably have noticed that she has left this role.

At Muntons, we are always looking to make improvements and have identified the need to plan for our future operational management requirements. Therefore we have created a new training programme, which offers development opportunities for existing employees to gain the necessary skills to move into managerial roles should they be required.

Chloe, who holds a BA honours degree in History, was selected as the inaugural candidate for our new Graduate Management Development programme and commenced the course in August this year. As part of her learning it is intended that she spend some time in different areas of the company over the course of a twelve-month period, gaining work experience in all areas of the company. Parallel to this she will be attending a series of management training courses.

The Graduate Management training programme will ensure that Chloe will gain a broad understanding of the processes and operations within Muntons, a broad understanding of management principles and an insight into the market environment within which we work.

After successful completion of the course Chloe will be able to offer management cover and be ideally placed to take on any appropriate management role.
