Muntons appoints non-executive director.

John Sutcliffe has been appointed as a new non-executive director at the Stowmarket based maltster and malted ingredient manufacturer Muntons.

Coming from a long background within the food industry at a very senior level, John is ideally placed to bring his years of experience to assist the Muntons senior executive team.

Prior to retirement, John was the CEO of the grocery division of Associated British Foods plc responsible for sales of products to the value of well over one billion pounds. He is currently the vice chairman of the British Nutrition Foundation.

John commented on his appointment to the Muntons Board “I have been genuinely impressed with the business; all of the resources needed to be a strong company are in place. Muntons have a terrific quality and service reputation.” He continued “There are great foundation stones in place. My desire is to assist the Board and the business to clearly identify avenues of growth – and of course to make it happen.”

Alan Ridealgh, Muntons Managing Director said “As our involvement on the global food industry increases it is becoming more and more important that we work with people as experienced as John, to ensure that we are developing and implementing the correct strategies for continued future growth and prosperity. It is a real pleasure to welcome John to our team.”
